Standing on a foot in the Louis XV style, with scrollwork handles and a finial on the cover made from nineteenth-century Dutch silver is a blue and white decorated Chinese porcelain bowl with lid from the Kangxi period (1661-1722) (fig. 1). The first time that this object crossed my path in the Rijksmuseum in Amsterdam, I could not grasp its context and did not understand its origin. The silver mounted porcelain bowl in the collection of the Rijksmuseum has two locales of origin, is made of two different materials and completely unrelated techniques and the time that separates the conception of the porcelain and its modification with silver mounts is almost two centuries.<sup>1</sup> I was completely captivated and wondered what happened to cause this amalgamation between culture, materials and time. How did two worlds, two different materials and two different periods unite in one object?

Until the early sixteenth century, there were no direct trade routes between Europe and China. Before the Portuguese sailed to the East Indies, individual goods from China found their way to Europe by indirect routes.<sup>2</sup> The objects of Chinese porcelain were valued and appreciated for their precious, rare and exotic aspects in the European collection where they arrived, and this sometimes led to the objects being encased with (gilded) silver on arrival.<sup>3</sup> Only in the Netherlands did this phenomenon of mounting Chinese porcelain with silver have a revival in the nineteenth century.<sup>4</sup>

It was not until recently when - together with Dr. Titus Eliëns - visiting a private collection in The Hague, with a vast amount of Chinese porcelain from the Kangxi to the Qianlong period (1735-1796) mounted with nineteenth-century Dutch silver, that I understood why I find these objects so fascinating: these objects are a reflection of me, my heritage and my culture. I am from Chinese descent but born in the Netherlands. I grew up in a "stereotypical" Chinese family but also raised by the Dutch "culture" of my environment. This double culture is reflected in the mounted objects and a personal reason why my thesis is about the mounting of Chinese porcelain with Dutch silver.

Chinese porcelain from the fifteenth and sixteenth century mounted with European (gilded) silver and bronze from the same period has been a subject of some important research. Next to entries in exhibition/museum catalogues, these objects are researched in the publication Chinesisches und japanisches Porzellan in europäischen Fassungen by D.F. Lunsingh Scheurleer (1980), the museum catalogue Mounted Oriental Porcelain in the J. Paul Getty Museum by Gillian Wilson (1999), a chapter in the museum catalogue, of the V&A, Chinese Export Ceramics by Rose Kerr and Luisa E. Grasskamp's "Frames of Appropriation" – a preliminary and shorter version of her publication Objects in Frames – starts with the integration of the unknown and foreign within culturally defined systems of display, that of the Kunstammern, but sheds a completely new light to illustrate the literal and figurative significance of framing and also discusses the philosophical and the sociological aspects of the frames of the objects. In Smentek's "Global Circulation, Local Transformation" objects are placed in a global perspective and gives the materiality of the objects the role of mediating cultural exchange.<sup>8</sup> To emphasize, the discussed objects in the above-mentioned publications are all about porcelain with silver mounts predating the nineteenth century.

However, research on the revival of mounting Chinese porcelain with Dutch silver mounts in the nineteenth century is minimal and almost not occurring at all. The only research found on Chinese porcelain with Dutch silver mounts from the nineteenth century are a paragraph in the abovementioned publication by Lunsingh Scheurleer and an article by Marten Calcer (2010) about a mounted kettle in his own collection.<sup>9</sup> Compared to articles on fifteenth- and sixteenth-century Chinese porcelain with contemporary European mounts – mentioned above – no fundamental works about this subject have been published, only some sporadic entries in catalogues occur – of which most of them claiming that mounts were applied for repairs or substitute for missing parts –, for example Catal.Nos. 82 (fig. 1) by Jan Rudolph de Lorm in the exhibition catalogue about showpieces in the nineteenth century: 'De Lelijke Tijd', Pronkstukken van Nederlandse interieurkunst by Reinier Baarsen (1995).<sup>10</sup> The lack of research therefore is an excellent opportunity to research the revival of mounting Chinese porcelain with Dutch silver mounts in the nineteenth century and that is why the research question of this thesis is: Why was there a revival of the phenomenon of mounting Chinese porcelain in the Netherlands in the nineteenth century? To answer this question, the following sub-questions are required:

- What kind of objects of Chinese porcelain were mounted with silver in nineteenth-century Netherlands?
- When were the silver mounts applied to the Chinese porcelain objects and when was the culmination of this practice?
- Why were the silver mounts applied to the porcelain objects?
- Who were the silversmiths who made these mounts?
- Were the mounts for porcelain made on order and who ordered them?
- Who were the collectors of (mounted) porcelain in the nineteenth century?

-What is the wider context in the field of nineteenth-century decorative arts in which this practice of mounting porcelain should be placed?

To find an answer, first of all the objects of Chinese porcelain with Dutch silver mounts from the nineteenth century need to be inventoried to construct a corpus. This corpus consists of two inventories, one is constructed from the already mentioned Private Collection in The Hague, and the second is derived from the objects in the Dutch museum collections. The Private Collection in The Hague has 54 objects of Chinese porcelain with Dutch silver mounts from the nineteenth century. A search into the online collections of the different museums in the Netherlands gives a selection of around 150 objects. Both sets of objects with nineteenth century mounts have not been studied and are as a whole unknown.

The Private Collection in The Hague (appendix 2) and the objects in Dutch museums (appendix 3) will be inventoried separately because of the difference of collecting, understanding and collection policy. The objects for the two inventories are mainly visually analysed and when possible, also physically handled. The collectors of the Private Collection in The Hague are also interviewed (appendix 1) to establish whether their thoughts on the objects they have collected can help our understanding of nineteenth-century collectors. The resulting two inventories are important appendices and will provide quantitative data to what kind of objects were mounted, when the mounts were applied and who the silversmiths were but also provide insights on why the mounts were applied, e.g. was this a repair, a change of function or an enhancement?

To better understand the conclusions made in the two inventories these will be placed in the context of the silversmiths who appeared the most in the datasets. But also, to define the styles of the mounts and to answer the questions: was there next to the functional a different reason for mounting, were the mounts for porcelain made on order and who ordered them, where did the pre mounted material come from and how did the silversmiths sell their goods? Answers will be found through archival research, that also results in a complete overview of the mounts made by silversmith Jacob Helweg (1798-1875) for the firm of Bonebakker (appendix 4), and literature research.

Finally, the discoveries made above will be placed in the context of the Netherlands in the nineteenth century. Literature research on how porcelain was mounted at arrival in Europe, what the supply and demand of porcelain in the Netherlands was, who the porcelain collectors in the nineteenth century were and what the social and cultural environment of the nineteenth century was, will be explored not only to enforce the conclusions but also hopefully answer the research question. The expected result for the revival of silver mounting of porcelain will largely have to do with the social and cultural environment in the Netherlands of the nineteenth century, how in the arts the recurrence of historical styles was in fashion and that the mindset was penetrated with a longing to the glorious past of the nation.

The mounted porcelain of a private collection in The Hague

Until now extensive research, as mentioned in the introduction, on Chinese porcelain with nineteenth-century Dutch silver mounts has not been undertaken. In Europe (gilded) silver mounts were applied to Chinese porcelain in the fifteenth and sixteenth century. To find out why a renaissance of the phenomenon of mounting Chinese porcelain took place in the Netherlands in the nineteenth century, first an inventory needs to be made of what has been mounted. This inventory is constructed from the objects found in fourteen Dutch museum collections and one private collection in The Hague.<sup>11</sup> In this chapter the inventory of the private collection will be analyzed (fig. 9) - in the next chapter the inventory of the museum collections - and, as discussed in the introduction, will answer the following questions:

- What kind of objects of Chinese porcelain were mounted with silver in nineteenth-century Netherlands?
- When were the silver mounts applied to the Chinese porcelain objects and when was the culmination of this practice?
- Why were the silver mounts applied to the porcelain objects?
- Who were the silversmiths who made these mounts?

The following analysis will start with a section on the background of the private collectors and their collection, constructed from an interview taken on the 3rd of April 2021 and transcribed and translated by the author from Mandarin (appendix 1). Afterwards this analysis is structured on largest group of object category and mentions the period that the porcelain is produced, the mounts that are applied, the change in function, the silversmith and, where possible, also the year of mounting.

Because of the restrictions around Covid-19 some museums were not included in this inventory or not visited/researched physically.

1.1 The background of the private collectors and their collections<sup>12</sup>

The private collection in The Hague is established by a couple who emigrated from China in the early 1980's. The appreciation of Chinese art had always been in their families. On both sides they grew up surrounded by art and even used the family porcelain. It was to their surprise to find Chinese porcelain in great amounts in a foreign country, on their first visit to the Queen's Day markets.<sup>13</sup> Beautifully phrased by them: "We were homesick of course and found in the items a connection to our family, our friends and our home.". The collection they built over the years, through purchases from markets, galleries and auctions, consists of Chinese art made during the Ming- and Qing-dynasties, and ranges from paintings, furniture and ceramics to jade, ivory carvings and bronze statues.

On the question what their main motivation for collecting is, their answer was: "In the beginning we just bought everything we saw, there was no plan. Nowadays we collect for the future." The collection is partly an overview of Chinese art that is common and also found in Dutch museums, with some exceptions of course and tells the story of the shared history between China and the Netherlands. They take great joy from lending their objects to museums and want to open their own private museum someday to share the stories of the objects.<sup>14</sup>

Before they collected mounted porcelain, they had a “Chinese taste”, being that Chinese porcelain for the mainland was better than porcelain made for the export and chine de commande. This is a common practice in collecting, as is also seen in the activities of the Society of Friends of Asian Art (de Koninklijk Vereniging van Vrienden der Aziatische Kunst) where art forms that play a role in the cultural past of China and Japan, rather than those of the seventeenth and eighteenth-century Netherlands, are most highly valued.<sup>15</sup> The Chinese porcelain objects with nineteenth-century Dutch silver mounts changed the opinion of the collectors. They find it surprising and interesting that a finished object can still evolve into something new. For them the mounts are not only an addition, but a cultural enrichment and a fusion between east and west. Also mentioned by them is how they interact with their collection and the objects, this gave a few interesting insights on the objects, which will be mentioned below.

1.2 The inventory of the collection

The largest object group in the private collection consists of fourteen mounted dishes. Dishes mounted with silver handles, with a total of twelve, are well presented in the collection.<sup>16</sup> The silver handles are a common mount that changes the function of the dish into a dish for presentation and serving. These mounts were not applied as a repair, the porcelain dishes are all in perfect condition. One of the mounted dishes (P.N. 1) is from the Wanli period (1572-

<sup>14</sup> The last loan to a museum in the Netherlands was for the exhibition China Character, from 25 March 2017 to 22 October 2017 in the Kunstmuseum Den Haag (formerly Gemeentemuseum Den Haag). Approximately 30 objects of Chinese porcelain were on loan to the museum.

1620), the mounts are by silversmith Cammans and made in 1882.<sup>17</sup> Eight other mounted dishes are from the Kangxi period, - three of which have mounts with unclear maker's marks, but these mounts do bear readable date letters for 1856 (P.N. 2), 1858 (P.N. 3, fig. 10) and 1883 (P.N. 4).<sup>18</sup> The other five mounted dishes have readable marks and are mounted by the silversmiths Kuik (P.N. 5) and Grevink (P.N. 6) both in 1851, Schmidt (P.N. 7) in 1862, Bekkers (P.N. 8) in 1876 and Kempen & Zn. (P.N. 9).<sup>19</sup> The maker's mark on the fencai-decorated Yongzheng period (1722-1735) mounted dish (P.N. 10) is unclear but bears the date letter O for 1898. The mounts on the dish (P.N. 11) from the Qianlong period (1735-1796) are made by the silversmith Scheltens or Spaanstra in 1887.<sup>20</sup> The mounted dish from the Daoguang period (1825-1850) is unique because a porcelain object from this period is completely absent in this research. Thus, this dish is also the only porcelain object with contemporary silver mounts.<sup>21</sup> The dish (P.N. 12), decorated in so-called Rose Medallion, is mounted with a lobed handle by Hoek in 1855.<sup>22</sup>

Exceptional is the set of two dishes mounted on a silver foot (P.N. 13, fig. 11). The mounts change the function of the Kangxi dishes into cake- or serving stands. In this corpus of mounted porcelain, sets are unusual which makes the mounted dishes even more special. The mounts are by the silversmith Helweg in 1855 and also has the jewelers' mark of Bonebakker & Zn.<sup>23</sup> The silverwork by

Helweg for Bonebakker is recorded extensively in their archive. This archive is now available in the city archive of Amsterdam and made it possible to find the exact moment of the delivery of the dishes by Helweg to Bonebakker. There were no other pair of curled feet being delivered in 1855 and because of this the exact date of the delivery is set on the 23rd of August 1855. That day Helweg delivered "1 pair of curled feet with engravings for porcelain dishes" to the jeweler for the wage of f34,00.<sup>24</sup>

Evenly, the group of mounted vases in the private collection also consists of fourteen objects. In this object group Helweg is also present and mounted a Kangxi vase (P.N. 14, fig. 12).<sup>25</sup> Of the other thirteen vases, twelve are from the Kangxi period. One of the vases is from the Yongzheng period and mounted with a silver lid and rim by Schmidt (P.N. 15).<sup>26</sup> Also mounted by Schmidt, with a silver lid and rim, are two Kangxi vases (P.N. 16 and P.N. 17).<sup>27</sup> Two other vases (P.N. 18 and P.N. 19) are mounted by Haas, one has a date letter M for 1871 (P.N. 19).<sup>28</sup> A vase (P.N. 20) is mounted by Limburg and another one (P.N. 21) is mounted by Bouscholte with a silver foot, lid and rim.<sup>29</sup> The remaining five vases are from the Kangxi period but have unclear maker's marks.<sup>30</sup> Most of the lids changed the vessels into casters for sugar, pepper or containers for other spices.

A considerable smaller group of objects in this collection are the five teapots, one is from the Yongzheng period (P.N. 26, fig. 13) and has a silver finial, rims and spout mounted by Arnoldi & Wielick in 1861.<sup>31</sup> The other four are from the Kangxi period and only one (P.N. 27) has readable maker's marks on the silver mounts of Bouscholte.<sup>32</sup> An interesting observation made by the collectors is that the original porcelain lids never close tightly and tend to fall off, but with the silver mounted rims around the lids the teapots closed tightly. Next to this observation, an also exciting suggestion is made about the spouts. Porcelain spouts tend to leak when a liquid is poured, a silver spout pours without dripping. This indicates that the mounts were not only applied for its aesthetical qualities and enrichment, but also to make the objects more practical.

Three porcelain saucers are silver mounted in this collection. One set of two saucers (P.N. 28) are mounted, just like the dishes, with a handle. The Kangxi saucers are mounted by Steiger and made in 1850.<sup>33</sup> In contrast to the common handle shaped mounts, saucers that are mounted into candleholders are also seen. One saucer in this collection (P.N. 29, fig. 14) is from the Kangxi period and mounted with silver into a candleholder by silversmith Kinderen in 1856.<sup>34</sup>

Another object that has not been encountered in this research is a garniture set of three (P.N. 30, fig. 15).<sup>35</sup> The three objects are all mounted on a silver foot, the two beaker vases with rims around the neck and the baluster vase with a silver neck. The mounts are made by silversmith Schmidt.<sup>36</sup> Bought as a set at an auction and undeniably being a set as seen by the decoration of the porcelain but also the silver mounts made by the same silversmith, it is peculiar that the baluster vase bears a later date letter of 1866 than the two beaker vases (1864). What may have occurred for this to happen can only be speculated about, but a possibility is that the baluster vase first had mounts similar to the beaker vases and an accident caused it to be remounted and repaired because the whole original neck of the vase is substituted in silver.<sup>37</sup>

The three Kangxi period porcelain jars with silver lid, or silver rims around the lid in this collection, are more common. One jar (P.N. 31, fig. 16) is mounted with a silver lid by Schmidt.<sup>38</sup> Mounted by Pieterse in 1857 is the jar with long Eliza's (P.N. 32).<sup>39</sup> The third jar (P.N. 33) is decorated with foliage and mounted, possibly by Kempen, with a silver rim and lid.<sup>40</sup> The observation made on lids by the collectors also applies to the lids of these jars. The silver mounts around the lids makes it possible to close the jars tightly.

Furthermore, three kettles with silver mounts are present in the collection. Two kettles, one from the transitional period (P.N. 34, fig. 17) and the other from the Kangxi period (P.N. 35, fig. 18), are mounted with a silver handle, rim and spouts by Arnoldi & Wielick in, respectively, 1850 and 1854 (D.L. Q and U).<sup>41</sup> The other kettle (P.N. 36) is also from the Kangxi period and has simple mounts, without maker's mark, around the rim of the lid.<sup>42</sup> Silver handles mounted on kettles are often a repairment, the original handles tend to break, but the mounted lids and spouts are a functional addition. The observation made by the collectors on tightly closing lids and dripless pouring spouts mentioned above, are also made here and applies to the kettles too.

The private collection contains two Kangxi period barrels. The original function of these barrels is still unknown, but the shape - which is also seen in wood and silver - suggests that it was made to contain a liquid. In the publication on the collection of the Jan Menze van Diepen stichting, where a barrel without mounts is in the collection, Christiaan Jörg suggests that these barrels possibly were a pre-modern hip flask.<sup>43</sup> The top part of both barrels in the private collection have been completely cut off. One is mounted with a lobed silver rim into a vase for cigars (P.N. 37, fig. 19) by the silversmith firm of Arnoldi & Wielick in 1860.<sup>44</sup> The other barrel (P.N. 38, fig. 20) has the same kind of lobed silver rim but is also mounted on a silver foot and combined with a Kangxi saucer that is mounted into a candleholder. This object is the only object in the whole research where two different objects are mounted together and onto a wooden pedestal. This combination is mounted by the silversmith Schmidt.<sup>45</sup>

Two Kangxi bowls mounted with a silver handle are present in the private collection. One round bowl (P.N. 39) is mounted by the silversmith firm of Kempen & Zn. in 1879.<sup>46</sup> Bowls were also produced in other shapes but only one square bowl has been found in this research. This square bowl (P.N. 40) has - next to the common silver handle - silver rims on the four corners and is mounted by the silversmith Begeer in 1883.<sup>47</sup> The silver mounts on the corner of the rim are unique and were purposely added to consolidate the fractured porcelain.<sup>48</sup> The function of both bowls is changed into a bowl for presentation.

Unprecedented in this research is the set of two Kangxi cups (P.N. 41, fig. 21) mounted on a silver foot and bearing the marks of silversmith Slotboom, who changed the function of the cups into goblets.<sup>49</sup> Early examples of cups being mounted into goblets do exist.<sup>50</sup>

No objects from the transitional period (1620-1683) with nineteenth century mounts are found in the museum collections. Interestingly there is a jug (P.N. 42, fig. 22) from this period in the private collection. This jug has a silver lid mounted by the firm of Arnoldi & Wielick in 1856.<sup>51</sup> Many surviving jugs with seventeenth century mounts, and also seen on still-life paintings from the seventeenth century, suggest that it was more common that these kinds of jugs were mounted then.<sup>52</sup> One smaller jug (P.N. 43) is also in the private collection and is from the Yongzheng period, mounted with a silver lid and spout by silversmith Steensma.<sup>53</sup>

a Dolphin). More common are seventeenth century tankards with contemporary mounts.<sup>55</sup>

As seen in this analysis of the private collection, the object categories that were mounted with silver differ greatly. Barrels, bowls, cups, dishes, garniture sets, jars, jugs, kettles, saucers, tankards, teapots and vases were mounted with silver. The porcelain objects date from the Wanli- to the Daoguang period, a period of almost three centuries. It stands out that 83,3% of the total amount of mounts applied on porcelain consists of Kangxi ware. Of the 54 objects with mounts in the Private Collection, 45 objects are from the Kangxi period (fig. 23).<sup>56</sup> In the inventory of the Private Collection the porcelain objects were provided with mounts in the second half of the nineteenth century. The peak of mounting Chinese porcelain with Dutch silver would have taken place in the beginning of this period, between 1850 and 1859 (fig. 24).<sup>57</sup> Many of the objects were mounted by the silversmith firm Arnoldi & Wielick, Helweg and Schmidt and were for the biggest part mounted in Amsterdam. The mounts were largely (75,9%) applied for a functional change and not only - what was suggested and mentioned in the introduction - for repairs but also to substitute for missing parts (lids, handles, etc.) (fig. 25). A simple silver spout on a teapot or a kettle was not mounted as a reparation, but purely a functional addition, making pouring with the kettle easier without spilling a drop. A rim around a lid on a jar, a teapot or a kettle was added to make the lids close tightly. These first conclusions have shown what kind of porcelain objects were mounted, when and by whom these mounts were applied, and also the functional changes of the porcelain caused by the mounts are discussed.

The mounted porcelain in Dutch museums

This chapter will analyze the inventory made from the collections of Chinese porcelain with nineteenth-century Dutch silver mounts in Dutch Museums. With a total of 106 objects, divided over fourteen museums, the objects range from the usual suspect – mounted dishes, jugs and kettles – to a few unique pieces. Do the results and the conclusions of the first chapter also apply to the objects in the Dutch museums? The findings in this chapter hopefully at least substantiate the conclusions of the first chapter and possibly even provide new and exciting insights.

Even though in a period when the Covid-19 pandemic and the governmental measurements made visiting depots, storages and museums across the country unlikely and unpractical, the objects in this chapter have almost all been analyzed visually and handled physically by the author.

The following analysis is structured alphabetically by museum, mentioning the amount of and object kind, the period that the porcelain is produced, the mounts that are applied, the change of function, the silversmith and, where possible, also the year of mounting.

2.1 – The inventory of the Amsterdam Museum<sup>58</sup>

In the collection of the Amsterdam Museum, six objects of Chinese porcelain with nineteenth century Dutch silver mounts are present, of which five have mounts made by the silversmith firm of Arnoldi & Wielick, silversmiths who have been mentioned a few times already in the previous chapter.<sup>59</sup> Two of these are identical Kangxi-period bowls (INV.No. KB1321, fig. 3, D.L. O for 1848 and INV.No. KB2488, fig. 4) mounted with silver handles that change their function into bowls for presentation and both engraved with "1823 23 April 1848".<sup>60</sup> Two other objects mounted by the same silversmith are kettles, one from the Wanli-period (INV.No. KB1319, fig. 8) is mounted with a silver finial, rim and spout in 1859 (D.L. Z) and the other one, from the Kangxi period (INV.No. KB1320, fig. 5), with the same type of mounts and is engraved with: "1823 18 Sept. 1848".<sup>61</sup> The observation made by the private collectors in the previous chapter also holds stand here in regards with the mounted rims and spouts. The last object mounted by Arnoldi & Wielick in the collection of the Amsterdam Museum is a Kangxi dish (INV.No. KB1413, fig. 6) with a silver handle.<sup>62</sup>

The other object, a Chinese Imari dish (INV.No. KA16364, fig. 7) from the Kangxi period, is mounted by Helweg - a silversmith who has also been mentioned in the previous chapter - in 1851 for the jeweler Bonebakker.<sup>63</sup> The mounts on the two dishes change the original function into a dish for cakes or serving/presentation.

2.2 – The inventory of the Drents Museum

The Drents Museum in Assen has two objects of Chinese porcelain with nineteenth-century Dutch silver mounts.<sup>64</sup> The objects are a tea-caddy and a dish, both made during the reign of the Kangxi emperor.<sup>65</sup>

The tea-caddy (INV.No. H-1980-0235) has a nineteenth-century silver lid as seen from the standard mark of a “sword”, a hallmark for silver that was used between 1814 and 1906. Following the observation made by the private collection and the conclusion of the previous chapter, this silver lid would make the caddy close tightly. The dish (INV.No. H-1963-0035) is mounted with a silver handle, changing its original function into a serving tray, by silversmith Lier & Bauer in 1859.<sup>66</sup>

2.3 – The inventory of the Fries Museum

Three objects – a saucer, a dish and a kettle – are in the collection of the Fries Museum in Leeuwarden.<sup>67</sup> The saucer (INV.No. C1991-101), from the Qianlong period, is mounted with a silver handle in the middle (standard mark “sword”), changing the function of the saucer into an ashtray. Also from the Qianlong period is the kettle (INV.No. C1971-162, fig. 26) with simple silver rims around the lid made by Arnoldi in 1865.<sup>68</sup>

It is in the Fries Museum that the earliest date letter is found, which is date letter H (1817) for the dish from the Kangxi period (INV.No. Z1980-054, fig. 27) mounted with a silver handle changing its function into a dish for serving/presenting, the sad thing being that the maker’s mark is unclear, but in contrast and interestingly the handle bears the initials of Idske Luitzens Kleiterp, born in Beers on 27 January 1831. This suggests that the engraving is from a later date.<sup>69</sup>

2.4 - The inventory of the Groningermuseum

In the Groningermuseum there are more than 70 objects of ceramics with silver mounts, of which 37 are included in this inventory. The other objects are on view in the galleries and not accessible, made from Japanese porcelain or Delftware and/or bear silver marks from an earlier date. The objects in this inventory are: two bowls, four dishes, one ewer, two jars, four jugs, two kettles, a pot, two saucers, two tea-caddy's, four teapots and thirteen vases, of which one miniature vase. Of these objects 27 bear a readable maker's mark and are mentioned below.<sup>70</sup>

Both bowls are from the Kangxi period and mounted with a silver handle, one is (INV.No. 1980.0162, fig. 28) mounted by Kempen & Zn and the other (INV.No. 1878.0134) is mounted by Swarte in 1867 (D.L. H).<sup>71</sup> The mounts turned the bowls into bowls for serving or presentation, this is also the case with the following mounted dishes.

The dishes are all mounted with a silver handle, three of them date from the Kangxi period and are mounted by Kramer & Zn. (INV.No. 1985.0637) in 1875 (D.L. Q), Brugma (INV.No. 1985-0639) and Saakes (INV.No. 1999.0611) in 1887 (D.L. C).<sup>72</sup> The other dish is from the Yongzheng period and the only object in this inventory decorated in encre de chine. This dish is mounted with a silver handle by Erp (INV.No. Collection Goedewaag).<sup>73</sup>

The Kangxi ewer (INV.No.1989.0362, fig. 29) is mounted with a silver lid and spout in 1853 (D.L. T) by Assen.<sup>74</sup> The silver spout would make pouring easier.

The jar with cover from the Kangxi period (INV.No. 1928.0198, fig. 30) is mounted by Oving.<sup>75</sup> The other jar (INV.No. 1900.0181.C) is from the Yongzheng period and the mounts have the standard marks of a "sword". The mounts on the jars make the lids close tightly.

Two of the jugs are from the Qianlong period, both mounted in Groningen, one by Oving (INV.No. 1904.0218, fig. 31) and the other one by Beek (INV.No. 1904.0027).<sup>76</sup> The other two jugs are from the Kangxi period and mounted by Bekkers (INV.No. 1904.0157) and Helweg (INV.No. 1899.0265, fig. 32).<sup>77</sup> The mounts are placed around the lids with a hinge making it possible to pivot and open the objects without separating the lid of the jug.

Of the two kettles only the Wanli kettle (INV.No. 1904.0119) has maker's marks (Beek, MT-491-9793, marks used between 1853-1888, Groningen). The mounts are placed as a repair at the bottom of the joint between the kettle and its handle. The mounts, a lid and rim, on the other kettle (INV.No. 1904.0154) has the standard marks (sword). The mounts are applied possibly as a substitute to the missing porcelain lid.

Mounted miniature porcelain is scarce in this research. The miniature vase (INV.No.1904.0187) from the Kangxi period in the collection of the Groningermuseum is mounted by Vries.<sup>78</sup>

One Kangxi saucer is mounted into a candleholder (INV.No. 1945.0546).<sup>79</sup> The other one is decorated in fencai and octagonal shaped, from the Qianlong period (INV.No. 1933.0730) and mounted with a silver handle by Hofman in 1868 (D.L. I).<sup>80</sup>

A polychrome decoration is also applied on the Chinese Imari Kangxi tea-caddy (INV.No. 1985.0610), which is mounted with a lid by Arkema.<sup>81</sup> The other tea-caddy is painted in blue-and-white and from the Qianlong period with a silver lid by Folkers.<sup>82</sup> The mounts on both caddies make the lids close tightly and secure.

Of the four teapots, one is mounted by Oving.<sup>83</sup> The teapot is made during the Qianlong period (INV.No. 1900.0005) and mounted with a silver handle - as a substitute to the missing porcelain handle - and spout in 1871 (D.L. M). The other three are INV.No.1904.0214 mounted with a silver hinge, rim and thumb rest (Kangxi period, mounts by Beek, MT-491-9793, marks used between 1853-1888, Groningen), INV.No. 1904.0034 mounted with a silver spout and finial (Yongzheng period fencai, mounts by Vries, MT-130-2593, marks used between 1868-1874, Groningen) and INV.No. 1978.0128 mounted with a silver rim (Qianlong period, maker's mark unclear, standard mark "sword").

Twelve vases are in the collection of the Groningermuseum. The most interesting one is the vase with INV.No. 1904.0172 (fig. 33). This vase, from the Kangxi period, is mounted with a silver lid and rim by Beek in 1868 (D.L. I).<sup>84</sup> On the inside of the lid a commemorative medal is mounted, rewarded to L.J. Wichers, M.D. in 1866.<sup>85</sup> The mounted vase is a bequest from his family to the Groningermuseum.<sup>86</sup> Ten other vases are from the Kangxi period and five have readable maker's marks, which gives mounts by the silversmiths B. Oving (INV.No. 2010.0055), silver foot, lid and rim by H. Oving (INV.No.1950.0137), two with silver lid and rim by de Vries (INV.Nos. 1904.0164 and 1904.022) and silver lid, internal cover and rim by Bekkers (INV.No. 1904.0163).<sup>87</sup> One vase, decorated in red and encre de chine, is from the Yongzheng period and is mounted with a silver lid and rim by Vorst.<sup>88</sup> one (INV.No. JMD-P-2068) is mounted in 1913 making these mounts the most modern in this inventory.<sup>90</sup>

A small saucer (INV.No. JMD-P-0767) from the Qianlong period with polychrome decoration possibly painted in Europe is mounted with a silver handle and feet by Bekkers.<sup>92</sup>

2.6 – The inventory of Kasteel-Museum Sypesteyn

In Kasteel-Museum Sypesteyn a total of eleven objects are in the collection, of which ten are made in the Kangxi period and one is from the Yongzheng period. These objects are a bowl, two dishes, one jar, one jug, one saucer, one teapot and four vases.<sup>94</sup> Three objects are mounted in 1853 (D.L. T), the bowl (INV.No. 8135) is mounted with a silver handle by Schmidt, the saucer (INV.No. 8131) has mounts changing it into a candleholder by Uriot and a jar (INV.No. 8128, fig. 34) is mounted with a silver lid by Kempen.<sup>95</sup>

The teapot (INV.No. 8133, fig. 35 a and b) is mounted with silver rims and spout by Voet & Zn. The rim of the lid is exceptionally mounted, the seam is almost invisible, and the lid closes perfectly.<sup>96</sup>

The two dishes with silver handle (INV.No. 81364 and 8136), both mounted in 1854 (D.L. U) are also by Voet.<sup>97</sup> These silver handle mounts are common and rather tedious compared to the the mounts on the abovementioned teapot.

Also mounted in 1854 is a vase (INV.No. 8129) by silversmith Ankum., changing the objects into a sugar caster.<sup>98</sup> Two vases (INV.Nos. 8170 a, b) are mounted by Held and one vase (INV.No. 8171, fig. 36) is by Helweg.<sup>99</sup>

The jug (INV.No. 8130) from the Yongzheng period is mounted with a silver lid, rim and pout and has a standard mark (sword).<sup>100</sup>

2.7 – The inventory of the Keramiekmuseum Princessehof

The Keramiekmuseum Princessehof in Leeuwarden has a permanent exhibition on the history of ceramics, because of this it was only possible to physically study two Kangxi period objects, a jar and a vase, which are included in this inventory.<sup>101</sup>

The jar (INV.No. NO 4996), mounted with a silver lid and rim, has no maker's mark but does bears a standard mark ("Lion"/2) dating it between 1814 and 1953.<sup>102</sup> The silver lid and rim make the jar close tightly. ## 2.8 – The inventory of the Kunstmuseum Den Haag

Three objects of Chinese porcelain with silver mounts are present in the collection of the Kunstmuseum Den Haag. The bowl, dish and jar are all made during the Kangxi period.<sup>103</sup>

The bowl (INV.No. 0152717, fig. 37) is mounted in 1865 (D.L. F) with a silver handle changing its function into a bowl for presentation and bears the maker's mark of Kempen.<sup>104</sup> The dish (INV.No. 0322830), of which the maker's mark is unclear, is also changed in function by the common silver handle into a serving or presentation dish and is mounted in 1851 (D.L. R).<sup>105</sup> The jar (INV.No. 0319784) with silver lid has a standard mark (sword) dating the silver between 1814 and 1906.<sup>106</sup>

2.9 – The inventory of Museum Arnhem

Museum Arnhem has eight porcelain objects with Dutch silver mounts from the nineteenth century in their collection: four dishes, a jug, a teapot and two vases.<sup>107</sup>

The four dishes are all produced during the reign of the Kangxi emperor, and have similar silver mounted handles that changes their function into presentation trays. The common mounts on these dishes are mounted by Benten

The Kangxi jug (INV.No. GMN 00040, fig. 38) is mounted with a silver hinge, lid, spout and thumb rest in 1854 (D.L. U) by the silversmith firm of Arnoldi & Wielick, a silversmith who has been mentioned a few times now.<sup>109</sup> The Yongzheng vase (INV.No. AB 7755) is mounted with a silver lid and rim by Bouscholte.<sup>110</sup> The other vase, with similar mounts turning the vase into tightly lidded jars, is made during the Kangxi period and mounted by Schmidt in 1859 (D.L. Z).<sup>111</sup> The polychrome Yongzheng teapot (INV.No. GM 02332) has a simple silver spout mounted and is marked with a standard mark (sword).

2.10 – The inventory of Museum Boijmans van Beuningen

The museum Boijmans van Beuningen in Rotterdam has ten objects of Chinese porcelain with nineteenth century Dutch silver mounts. Four vases, three jugs, one teapot, a tea-caddy and a dish. Seven of these porcelain objects are made during the Kangxi period, two are dateable to the Qianlong period and one is from the Yongzheng period.<sup>112</sup>

Only the set of two miniature vases (INV.Nos. A1326 and A1327, fig. 39) have a readable maker's mark of Begeer and are mounted with a silver collar and handles.<sup>113</sup> The other objects have unreadable maker's marks or, either have a standard mark (sword) or a duty mark ("dolphin" marks used between 1859-1893), dating them to the nineteenth century.

Three objects (INV.Nos. A1358, A7509 and A7510) have mounts for possible repairment or substitution for missing parts. The biggest intervention of functional change is seen at the vases, made into two lidded bottles (INV.Nos. A1424 and A7505) and two vases with handles (INV.Nos. A1326 and A1327), and the dish (INV.No. A7506), which is mounted with the frequently seen handle and changed into a presentation tray.<sup>114</sup>

2.11 – The inventory of Museum Paulina Bisdorn van Vliet

Eleven objects of Chinese porcelain, all of them from the Kangxi period, with silver mounts are present in the collection of Museum Paulina Bisdorn van Vliet.<sup>115</sup> Two very interesting objects in this collection are a chandelier probably produced by the firm of Delaunoy. This chandelier is made from copper mounted porcelain consisting of ten cups with saucers, two vases, a jar and a bowl placed upside down. The other interesting object is a table for games and made from a porcelain basin and vase mounted with wood.<sup>116</sup>

Until now, in this research only a few miniature porcelain objects with mounts are encountered. In the collection of Museum Paulina Bisdorn van Vliet a set of five are present (INV.Nos. 2484 to 2488). The objects have intriguing mounts that change the original shape of the porcelain. The simple shapes of the porcelain objects are completely taken over by the silver mounts and made into an incomplete tea service. It is a shame that miniature mounts have no maker's mark, but they do bear a standard mark dating them to the nineteenth century.<sup>117</sup>

Bearing the same standard marks of a “sword” and also without a maker’s mark is the jug (INV.No. 2576) mounted with silver hinge, lid, rim and spout.<sup>118</sup>

A small vase (INV.No. 2481) is mounted with a silver lid by Ven.<sup>119</sup> Two Kangxi period ewers (INV.No. 2036 and 2037) are mounted with a silver foot, lid topped with a figure of a Chinese man and spout by the silversmith Rennefeld in 1852 (D.L. S).<sup>120</sup>

The biggest transformation of the porcelain in this inventory is found at two barrels (INV.Nos. 2489 and 2490, fig. 40). The original barrels have already been mentioned in the first chapter. In contrast to the barrels in the Private collection these in the collection of Museum Paulina Bisdorf van Vliet preserve their original shape but are mounted with silver, with the same figures of a Chinese man as the ewer above, and a construction of wood inlaid with ivory. The barrels are changed into liqueur vessels by their mounts.<sup>121</sup> The maker’s marks are unclear; both do have the standard marks, and one does have a jeweler’s mark of H.J. Verschuur (1828-1857).<sup>122</sup>

2.12 – The inventory of Museum Prinsenhof Delft

Museum Prinsenhof Delft has two objects of Chinese porcelain with nineteenth century silver mounts, of which only one has a maker’s mark.<sup>123</sup> The company of Begeer changed the function of the Kangxi dish (INV.No. 1552) by mounting it with a silver handle into a presentation tray.<sup>124</sup> The vase (INV.No. R-1693) is mounted with a silver lid and has the standard marks of a "sword".

2.13 – The inventory of the Rijksmuseum Amsterdam

The Rijksmuseum Amsterdam only has two objects of Chinese porcelain with nineteenth-century Dutch silver mounts in their collection.<sup>125</sup> That the Rijksmuseum only has two objects in this category has to do with their collection policy and that of the Society of Friends of Asian Art (Vereniging van Vrienden der Aziatische Kunst) which in the past had its focus on the Chinese origin and the Chinese context of the objects.<sup>126</sup>

The bowl with cover (INV.No. BK-1992-1, fig. 1), mentioned previously in the introduction, is mounted - clearly to enhance its appearance - with handles and has a silver foot. The porcelain is dated to the Kangxi period and the silver mounts are made by silversmith Gabriël & Co. in 1851 (D.L. R). This shape of Kangxi porcelain is rare, but similar bowls has been found in the Hatcher cargo. Originally already mounted in China, the existing openings are used for the elaborate Dutch silver mounts.<sup>127</sup>

The other object in the collection of the Rijksmuseum is a Wanli period kettle (INV.No. AK-RBK-15796, fig. 41) with silver handle, rim and spout. The mounted handle is clearly a repair of the missing porcelain handle, the rim and

2.14 – The inventory of the Zeeuws Museum

The Zeeuws Museum in Middelburg has three objects of Chinese porcelain with nineteenth century Dutch silver mounts.<sup>129</sup> These are two casters with silver finial (INV.Nos. AB1573-01 and 02) and a jar with cover mounted with a silver rim (INV.No. AB1532). All the porcelains are from the Kangxi period and have no readable maker's marks but do bear the standard mark of a "sword".<sup>130</sup>

To summarize this inventory and the analysis of the objects in museum collections, the conclusion can be made that the same object categories as is seen in the Private Collection have been mounted with silver. The mounts are similar and sometimes identical as we saw in the case of the kettles mounted by the firm of Arnoldi & Wielick in both the Private and museum collection. But some objects do have different kind of mounts, for example: the barrels from Museum Paulina Bisdom van Vliet and the saucer/ashtray in the Friesmuseum. Unique in the museum collection are the mounts and the porcelain of the lidded bowl from the Rijksmuseum and also not one ewer is present in the Private collection. In contrast, other objects are only found in the private collection, the sets of mounted cups, dishes, saucers and the garniture are not seen in this chapter. With a total of 106 porcelain objects, 95 of them are decorated in blue-and-white (89,6%). The porcelain date from the Wanli period to the Qianlong period and 83 of the 106 mounts, which translates into 78,3%, are applied to porcelain from the Kangxi period (fig. 42).<sup>131</sup> Another conclusion can be made that throughout the nineteenth, and even into the early twentieth century, Chinese porcelain has been mounted with Dutch silver, from 1817 until 1913. The culmination of the phenomenon of mounting Chinese porcelain with silver in the Netherlands was between 1850 and 1859, nineteen objects in this inventory of the museum collections have been mounted (fig. 43).<sup>132</sup> This is also demonstrated by the data collected from the objects in the Private Collection. The most occurring silversmith - with a total of fourteen objects - who provided mounts for porcelain, in both the Dutch museum collections and the Private Collection, is the silversmith firm of Arnoldi & Wielick. Following this inventory and the resemblances of the objects between the Private Collection and the objects in museum collections the same reasoning can be given for the application of mounts. The porcelain objects were indeed mounted as repair (14,1%) or as a substitute for a missing part (21,7%), but the mounts were mostly (64,2%) applied as a functional addition, making objects more useful or useful again (fig. 44).

<sup>132</sup> Number of objects mounted: 4 before 1850, 19 between 1850-1859, 9 between 1860-1869, 2 between 1870-1879, 1 between 1880-1889, 1 after 1890.

On the basis of the previous two chapters, that for the most is based on visual analysis and with a few exceptions combined with archival and literature research, it is now clear what kind of objects have been mounted and by whom. The conclusion is also made that silver mounts were sometimes applied for a (functional) reason and not only to repair or substitute for missing parts. But was there next to the functional also a different reason for mounting? This chapter will also seek to answer the following questions:

- Who were the silversmiths who made these mounts?
- Did the silversmiths have a signature style?
- Why were the silver mounts applied to the porcelain objects?
- Were the mounts for porcelain made on order and who ordered them?
- For who did the silversmiths work and how did they sell their product?

To answer these questions and better understand the conclusions made in the previous chapters the following chapter will focus on the silversmith firms and the master silversmiths themselves. Answers will be found through archival research and literature research.

For this chapter extensive use has been made of the archive of As. Bonebakker and Zn. The archive is managed by the City Archive of Amsterdam and accessible through their website. The so-called werkmansboeken - which are ledgers mentioning the delivered work by the silversmiths working for the firm Bonebakker - where Jacob Helwegs' products are mentioned are divided into fifteen folios, ranging from 406.174 (1822-1825) until 406.188 (1863-1866). The research into this archive has also resulted in a complete overview of the mounts made by silversmith Jacob Helweg for the firm of Bonebakker (appendix 4).

3.1 The silversmith firm Arnoldi & Wielick

The two inventories combined have fourteen porcelain objects with silver mounts made by the firm of Arnoldi & Wielick (figs. 2-6, 8, 13, 17-19, 22, 26, 38 and 41).<sup>133</sup> Jacob Daniël Arnoldi (1806-1873) and Johannes Wilhelmus Wielick (1790-1867) were two silversmiths who worked together under one maker's mark between 1836-1863. Arnoldi registered as silversmith when he was already thirty, at the time taking over the workshop of silversmith Hendrik Smits (1772-1841).<sup>134</sup> Arnoldi continued the workshop under his new maker's mark after Wielick left in 1863.<sup>135</sup>

The firm must have mounted many objects, considering that the largest number of objects with maker's marks found in this research are made by Arnoldi & Wielick. They must also have had some recognition and were possibly well-known for their work in the nineteenth century because five of the objects are from the collection of the Backer stichting and on loan at the Amsterdam Museum (fig 3-6, 8).<sup>136</sup> Mounted Chinese porcelain objects were popular gifts for special occasion and bought by the Backers, an aristocratic family, and their relatives around the 1850's at jewelers, possibly Benten & Zn. and A.D. Verschuur (1848-1884) that Arnoldi & Wielick supplied with mounted porcelain.<sup>137</sup>

Two bowls (INV.Nos. KB1321, fig. 3 and KB2248, fig. 4) in the Amsterdam Museum are mounted with silver handles and have been engraved with: "1828 23 April 1848". The engraving refers to the 25th wedding anniversary of Willem Jacob Backer (1798-1851) and Anna Maria Rendorp (1795-1859). Because of the two identical bowls it is a possibility that the couple ordered multiple pieces of porcelain to be mounted by the firm of Arnoldi & Wielick and gave these as commemorative presents to their relatives.<sup>138</sup>

The kettle (INV.No. KB1320, fig. 5) has “1823 18 Sept. 1848” engraved on the rim, the date of the 25th wedding anniversary of Ferdinand Rendorp (1797-1878) and Elisabeth Anthonia Backer (1799-1859). The other kettle (INV.No. KB1319, fig. 8) probably also belonged to them.<sup>139</sup>

The dish mounted with a silver handle (INV.No. KB1413, fig. 6) has no engravings but is still together with its original box and a handwritten note. The label on the box is of the store of jeweler firm A.D. Verschuur. The note is written by the family Hooft van Woudenberg en Gerenstein and on this note it is written that the dish is given to Cornelis Henrick Backer (1825-1908) and Olowina Wilhemina Alewijn (1824-1878) for the occasion of their upcoming marriage on the 19th of April 1850.<sup>140</sup>

The Backers were not the only ones mounting porcelain to commemorate a special occasion like a wedding.<sup>141</sup> The Wichers family of Groningen made a commemorative medal for the 50th wedding anniversary between Wicher Wichers (1719-1798) and Wibbina Clara Smith (1723-1798) on 12 April 1794.<sup>142</sup> Half a century later this medal was mounted on the inside of a silver lid of a porcelain jug (fig. 31).<sup>143</sup> Another object from the Wichers family, also a commemorate medal, was rewarded by the mayor of Groningen to Doctor of medicine Lucas Johan

3.2 The silversmith Johannes Hendrik Schmidt and his firm

In this inventory of the private and Dutch museum collections combined eleven objects are mounted by silversmith Johannes Hendrik Schmidt (1825-1900). He became master in 1852 and received assignments from the jeweler Hendrik Willem van Loon (1822-1901), for example the wall mounted chandelier in 1864 for the occasion of the 25th anniversary of the marriage between king Willem III and queen Sophie.<sup>146</sup> He opened his own store on the Koningsplein in Amsterdam in 1867. It is not clear whether he still made works himself or if his apprentices did after his store was opened. Interestingly all the dated mounts in this inventory are made before the opening. He eventually officially resigned at the guild in 1893.<sup>147</sup>

Schmidt used many different styles for the silver mounts for the porcelain objects. The bowl in the collection of Kasteel-Museum Sypesteijn is in a Louis XV style and the garniture of the private collection is in a Louis XVI style (fig. 15).<sup>148</sup> These different styles are even mixed as is seen at the wall mounted chandeliers, which were part of a set with a ceiling chandelier. Here the renaissance style was

The incorrect combination of historical styles was frowned upon, among others by the firm of Kempen & Zn. at the Exhibition 'de Eerste Algemeene Tentoonstelling van Nederlandsche Nijverheid en Kunst' in 1866 when the chandeliers were presented.<sup>149</sup>

3.3 The silversmith firm Kempen & Zn.

There are six objects mounted by the firm of Kempen & Zn. present in this inventory of the private and museum collections.<sup>150</sup> The silversmith Johannes Mattheus van Kempen (1764-1833) was the founder of the firm J.M. van Kempen & Zn., the most important factory for works in silver in the second half of the nineteenth century. His grandson Johannes Mattheus van Kempen III (1814-1877) made the company into the first silversmith firm that worked in an industrial effort which led the grow of the company between 1835-1855. Even today this company, under the name Koninklijke Van Kempen & Begeer, still exists.<sup>151</sup>

Kempen & Zn. send in nineteen works designed by Gerardus Willem van Dokkum (1828-1903) to the World Exhibition of 1851 in the Crystal Palace in London to be exhibited. In the designs of the objects by van Dokkum multiple different styles were combined and applied, to show how historical styles should be applied correctly, because Kempen was against the incorrect syncretism that was common and seen extensively in the decorative arts of the nineteenth century.<sup>152</sup> Noteworthy, the silver mounts on the porcelain objects by Kempen &

Zn. (fig. 28) are modest in comparison to the mounts made by Schmidt (figs. 15, 16 and 20).

3.4 The silversmith firm Gabriel & Co.

In the middle of the nineteenth century, the silversmiths Carl Theodoor Gabriël (1823-after 1894) and Casper Hubert Rennefeld (1819-1885), who established and worked together as silversmith firm Gabriël and Co.(1851-1852), replaced the original and modest Chinese metal handles and finial of a lidded blue and white porcelain bowl (fig. 1) with elaborate silver mounts. Unknown is the reason why the original metal handles and finial were replaced, possibly because of damage, loss or maybe the original mounts were just out of taste. The Kangxi bowl, now present in the collection of the Rijksmuseum Amsterdam (INV.No. BK-1992-1), is decorated with silver mounts with asymmetrical leaf- and scrollwork but placed in a symmetrical fashion in the Louis XV style.<sup>153</sup>

Smaller silversmith firms tend to sell their goods through jewelers and so did Gabriel & Co., selling their works to the jeweler A.D. Verschuur.<sup>154</sup> This bowl was in stock at Verschuur for twelve year before it was engraved and sold to the members of the society Doctrina et Amicita in Amsterdam, who described the bowl as a punchbowl and gave this to Jan Rutgert Schuyner (1777-1868) for his 50 years of service as treasurer of the society in 1864.<sup>155</sup>

3.5 The silversmith family De Haas

A mounted porcelain bowl resides in an Amsterdam private collection (fig. 45).<sup>156</sup> This polychrome bowl from the Jiaqing period (1796-1820) period is mounted with a flared foot engraved in a Louis XV-style by the silversmith firm of the Widow of Elize Henry de Haas (1842-1854). Two scrolled handles, decorated with acanthus leaves, connects the foot to the edge of the bowl. The mounted bowl is presented by prince Hendrik as prize for a rowing competition in 1850 on the IJ-river and won by association De Hoop from Amsterdam.<sup>157</sup> The foot is also engraved with an inscription reading: '1 July 1850 on the IJ-river/boom prince Hendrik.; Competition 1 June 1850. Dutch Sail- and Row association.; Coxswain P.H. Holtzman/Rowers G.P. Gilhuijs W. Koopmans W. Goblijn T.G.V. Everdingen.'<sup>158</sup>

The silversmith firm was established in Amsterdam in 1835 by the Elize Henry de Haas (1791-1842), who mostly made large silverworks. His wife Grietje Smith took over the company after the passing of Elize Henry in 1842. Just like Gabriël, Rennefeld and Arnoldi & Wielick, de Haas mastered the technique of mounting porcelain with silver, as is seen from the esteemed clients these firms had. That the firm of de Haas was known for mounting porcelain is also clearly demonstrated by the recognition prince Hendrik gave when ordering the trophy for the rowing competition. The company was passed on to Daniel Jan de Haas (1821-1886) in 1854, who also mounted porcelain - of which two are present in the private collection in The Hague - and worked until 1876, selling his products,

3.6 The silversmith Jacob Helweg

Jacob Helweg (1798-1875) mounted almost 1500 objects of ceramics with silver mounts during his career for the jeweler As. Bonebakker and Zn. only, of which at least 1400 mounted objects were made of porcelain.<sup>160</sup> According to Barend van Benthem, a specialist who published his research on the jeweler Bonebakker, around 60% of the total production of Helweg was made for As. Bonebakker and Zn.<sup>161</sup> If this is true, the assumption can be made that Helweg produced a total of around 2500 mounts for ceramics. That only six objects (fig. 7, 12-13, 30 and 34) remain in this inventory is curious, this is only 0,24% of his total production.<sup>162</sup> A reason why the mounted porcelain is not encountered in great numbers can be that the porcelain itself is vulnerable, as is concluded by Benthem.<sup>163</sup> This does contradict with the large - compared to Helweg - number of mounted objects found that were made by the firm of Arnoldi & Wielick, of which is unknown what the total amount of objects were that they mounted. It is possible that they even mounted more porcelain than Helweg did.

Jacob Helweg began his career in 1822 when he registered at the guild as large silver worker, until 1864, when his son Jacob Hendrik Helweg (1836-1903) took over the workshop.<sup>164</sup> Between the 1st of January 1854 and the 30th of June 1855 he worked exclusively and as main producer of silverwork for As.

Bonebakker & Zn.<sup>165</sup> The Helweg family was known for their table silver and continuing the family forge was reserved for Jacob's brother Roelof jr. (1792-1844).<sup>166</sup> It is for certain that Jacob learned and developed his skills elsewhere, because of the expertise needed to make the large silver works he made. His apprenticeship started in 1814 until 1822, apparently in the workshop of J.H. Stellingwerff (1773-1823). That he learned from Stellingwerff is seen in the early works of Jacob Helweg, the design and execution are comparable to his master's.<sup>167</sup>

As mentioned in the first chapter, the archive of As. Bonebakker and Zn. is accessible through the website of the City Archive of Amsterdam. Helweg's work for Bonebakker is kept up in fifteen folios.<sup>168</sup> The earliest mount by Helweg for the firm Bonebakker, a lid on a porcelain cup, was delivered on the 6th of October 1832 for the production prize of 4,00 guilders.<sup>169</sup> His last mount, a handle for a porcelain bowl, was delivered on 29 March 1864 for f11,80.<sup>170</sup>

In the Bonebakker archives, mounts by Helweg occasionally occurred in the 1830's, with a total of 24 mounted ceramic objects in that decade.<sup>171</sup> In the first half of the 40's 36 objects of ceramics were mounted and steadily the numbers of mounts made by Helweg were growing in the second half of the decade.<sup>172</sup> In 1849 a total of 137 objects of porcelain were provided of mounts, in 1850 147 mounts were applied, reaching the peak of mounting in 1851 with 183 objects of porcelain (fig. 46).<sup>173</sup> The conclusion can be made with certainty that the heyday of mounting porcelain took place at the beginning of the 1850's, as is seen in the previous two chapters and the amount of mounted porcelain Helweg produced.

Furthermore, it was possible to determine the exact moment of delivery by Helweg to Bonebakker of the two dishes mounted on a silver foot from the Private collection (fig. 11), which was the 23rd of August 1855 for the wage of f34,00.<sup>174</sup> The polychrome dish (fig. 7) in the Amsterdam Museum with a silver handle has a date letter of 1851. In that year only four "colored" dishes were mounted by Helweg. Three of them were delivered on the 26th of January 1851 for f20,70 ranging to f30,60 and one is delivered on the 29th of March 1851 for f24,30.<sup>175</sup> The dish of the Amsterdam Museum must be one of these four.

The objects categories mounted by Helweg differ greatly, from dishes, bowls, canisters, ewers and pots he made presentation dishes and bowls, lidded ewers, pepper and sugar casters, and tea canisters.<sup>176</sup> Benthem also mentions that the porcelain was obtained, just like crystal used for mounting, from the antique dealers L.H. Gans & Co. and S. Speijer & Zn in Amsterdam. These dealers most likely bought their stock from estate auctions. The objects of porcelain that Bonebakker obtained from them would then be passed to the silversmiths for mounts. These mounted objects would be on stock at the jewelers.<sup>177</sup> On the contrary, porcelain could also be delivered by the client placing orders as is seen on different occasions, for example: on the 8th of May 1847 "2 porcelain candlestick holders mounted the saucers received", on the 17th of February 1849 "2 ditto (handles) for bowls (the bowls received)" and on the 3rd of August

In this chapter the works of the silversmiths Arnoldi & Wielick, J. Schmidt, Kempen & Zn., Gabriël & Co., the silversmith family De Haas and J. Helweg have been discussed. Silversmiths like Arnoldi & Wielick, and the firm of Kempen & Zn. have a clear style of mounting porcelain objects, others like Schmidt and Helweg used different historical styles and combined these. Sometimes, the style of the mounts and the work of the silversmiths were known because clients would specially order objects from jewellers working with these silversmiths. This for example can be seen at the mounted porcelain objects from the Backer stichting in the collection of the Amsterdam Museum. The porcelain objects were all mounted by one firm, the silversmith firm of Arnoldi & Wielick and possibly ordered at the jewellers Benten & Zn. or A.D. Verschuur. The mounts were not ordered for repairs, substitution for missing parts, changes or improvement of function, as we saw in the previous chapters, but for a completely different reason. The porcelain was mounted on order with silver as a gift – silver for a silver anniversary – or to commemorate special occasions, this is also seen with the mounted porcelain in the collection of the Backer Stichting. In the archive of the silversmith Helweg at the jeweler Bonebakker, clients rarely provided the porcelain when placing an order. The majority of the mounted porcelain would have been bought by clients at the jeweler from stock, the porcelain obtained by the jewelers through antique dealers and the mounts provided by the silversmiths, such as the punchbowl mounted by Gabriël & Co. that was in stock for twelve years at A.D. Verschuur.

Chapter 4

Mounted porcelain in the nineteenth century

The previous chapters concluded that mounting porcelain with silver had its peak in the beginning of the 1850's and that most of the porcelain used for mounts were produced during the reign of the Kangxi emperor. This raises the questions why porcelain was mounted in the first place and why Kangxi period porcelain was mounted the most. Furthermore, how does the abovementioned conclusions coincide with the nineteenth century and the collecting of Chinese porcelain in the Netherlands? To answer these questions, a paragraph will be needed about collecting and mounting porcelain in Europe before the nineteenth century to set the stage, to understand why porcelain was mounted in first instant. Following this the chapter will then proceed to the VOC (The Dutch East India Company) and the porcelain they traded to clarify why Kangxi porcelain was mounted the most. Afterwards the porcelain collectors and the environment of the decorative arts in nineteenth century Netherlands, where the mounting of porcelain took place, will be explored, to illustrate how and why the phenomenon of mounting Chinese porcelain with silver had a rebirth.

4.1 - Mounted porcelain in Europe before the nineteenth century<sup>179</sup>

The phenomenon of mounting objects - to emphasise their preciousity and adapt them for use - already occurred in an ecclesiastical context in the eleventh century.<sup>180</sup> Mounts were also applied on one of the earliest documented Chinese porcelain objects that reached Europe, the so-called Gaignières-Fonthill vase (fig.

47). The Yuan dynasty Qingbai vase can be traced back to the collection of Louis the Great, King of Hungary (1326-1382).<sup>181</sup>

In the Kunstkammern, objects with 'exotic' and unknown origin, for example narwhal horns, rock crystals, nautilus shells and also Chinese porcelain were systematically gathered to be displayed.<sup>182</sup> The Kunstkammern represented the outside world, possessed, understood and controlled by its collector, these factors – next to the abovementioned emphasising and adaptation – were also causes for the application of (gilded) silver mounts.<sup>183</sup>

The same reasons for mounting are also applicable outside the context of the Kunstkammern. Mounts were applied in a society that admired 'exotic' objects and by using precious metals more value was added, enhancing its appearance and rareness. The objects were also mounted to transform them into a functional shape which was more readily acceptable in sixteenth-century Europe.<sup>184</sup>

To summarize, objects were mounted to emphasise its preciousness, enhance its appearance and rareness, to express the worldliness of the collector and to transform it into a functional shape. Almost all of these factors also occur with the mounting porcelain in the nineteenth-century Netherlands.

4.2 - The porcelain supply and demand in the Netherlands

This paragraph will focus on the trade of porcelain, to clarify why Kangxi period porcelain was the preferred porcelain to be mounted with silver. Van Campen and Jörg have shown, a small number of dishes and cups of Kraak porcelain were displayed in the homes of the wealthier citizens in the Netherlands at the beginning of the seventeenth century. This porcelain was acquired through the plundering of Portuguese ships by the Dutchmen.<sup>185</sup> With the establishment of the VOC (1602-1799), this quickly changed and enormous quantities of porcelain, around 50 million, were shipped to the Netherlands over the course of the seventeenth and eighteenth century.<sup>186</sup>

The VOC settled on Formosa in 1624 and started to conduct a regular junk trade - a trade centered on supply - with South China.<sup>187</sup> Tens of thousands of porcelain objects were imported into the Netherlands each year until the 1650's.<sup>188</sup> In 1634 orders were given to the VOC to buy porcelain after Dutch example - ewers, dishes and beakers. The success of these wares was immediate and vast amounts followed.<sup>189</sup> Tankards, mustard pots, candlesticks, salts, ewers and other items in Western shapes were soon an indispensable part of the range.<sup>190</sup> Even with these orders after Western shapes, porcelain was still an exclusive commodity with special worth and status.

When in 1729 the VOC arrived in Canton to trade - a direct trade on demand - the Dutch market for porcelain had changed considerably. How porcelain was perceived and the social role that it had, had undergone a great change by the eighteenth century. At the end of the seventeenth century, first of all, the vast imports had devaluated porcelain into a common good and was widely available at a reasonable price. It became a utensil, in reach to a wide stratum of the population and an article for daily use.<sup>191</sup> Secondly, from the end of the seventeenth and throughout the eighteenth century - as is seen in Royer's house mentioned below -, porcelain was also used to furnish rooms in the fashionable style developed by Daniel Marot (1661-1752). The porcelain was, often in large quantities, incorporated as a decorative element (fig. 48) and put on display in and on cabinets; brackets on the walls, between the windows and above the mantelpiece.<sup>192</sup>

Being an article for daily use and for this style of decoration, porcelain was made on order. The orders that were placed led to that most pieces of Chinese porcelain in the second quarter of the eighteenth-century Netherlands were part of a service or a set, as tableware for dinner, for drinking tea, coffee or chocolate, or for the abovementioned interior decoration. The fact is, as is mentioned by Jörg and Kroes, that in the Netherlands during the Yongzheng and Qianlong period porcelain was mostly ordered through Canton and produced after demand in the rest of China as complete sets of tableware or for interior decoration and that the porcelain from the Kangxi period was purchased according to the supply.<sup>193</sup>

That Kangxi porcelain had the preference to be enhanced with silver mounts in the nineteenth century has to do with this supply and demand in the Netherlands.

Kangxi ware were self-contained objects, not like the sets or services made during the following periods. Sets or services with mounts are also not mentioned in the inventory of the Private Collection in The Hague, the Dutch museum collections and the work delivered by silversmith Helweg in the previous chapters. When mounted sets do occur, these objects are identical, but not part of a bigger service.<sup>194</sup>

A second reason why silver mounts were applied to Blue-and-white Kangxi porcelain was the fact that earlier mounted porcelain objects were mostly monochrome or decorated in polychrome colors. This kind of decorated porcelain was a popular combination in the eighteenth century with French gilded bronze, as mentioned by Lorm. He also mentions that the combination of silver with Blue-and-white decorated porcelain is typically Dutch.<sup>195</sup> That the color of the decoration of porcelain could influence the material for the mounts is also underlined in the article by Kruijff, he remarks that polychrome colored porcelain was better suited with mounts made of gilt copper.<sup>196</sup>

To conclude, at the beginning of the seventeenth century porcelain was still very rare and uncommon, enormous quantities were imported over the course of the following centuries which led to the point that porcelain became an article for daily use but also incorporated as a decorative element in interiors. That Kangxi porcelain was preferred to be enhanced with mounts had to do with the supply and demand of porcelain - being self-contained and not part of a set or service - and the color of its decoration.

4.3 - Porcelain in the Netherlands in the nineteenth century

The revival of appreciation for Asian arts and particularly Chinese porcelain in the Netherlands of the nineteenth century had a remarkable result: the renaissance of mounting porcelain, especially Blue-and-white porcelain with silver mounts.<sup>197</sup> But, as Budel has shown, at the start of the nineteenth century, porcelain was completely out of fashion. It did not fit in the neo-classicistic and Empire style interiors of the beginning of the century as European porcelain or earthenware did.<sup>198</sup> Van Campen underlines this disinterest by mentioning that: "The first half of the (19th) century is notable primarily for a massive lack of interest in Oriental porcelain. The Royal Cabinet's early ceramic acquisitions reveal that there was no question of a genuine interest in Chinese porcelain".<sup>199</sup> This unpopularity of porcelain at the beginning of the nineteenth century in the Netherlands could also have had to do with the abundance of porcelain that was available.<sup>200</sup>

A trailblazer was Jean Theodore Royer (1737-1807), his collection of Chinese porcelain, that consisted mostly of export porcelain - with the main function being a decorative one -, was bequeathed to the Royal Cabinet of Rarities (Koninklijke Kabinet van Zeldzaamheden) in 1816 and instigated the porcelain collection of the Rijksmuseum Amsterdam. Royer started collecting porcelain around the 1760-70's, a time when it was rather easy to obtain these wares from antique dealers and at sales in the Netherlands. During the time that Royer collected Chinese porcelain the downfall of the ware, to the point that it totally went out of favor, was already imbedded and the porcelain would thus have come on the market for relatively low prices. In Royer's house in The Hague a separate room was reserved for the porcelain, where it was displayed in decorative manner, inspired by Marot, on tables and pyramidal corner shelves. When the porcelain was put on display in 1816 at the Royal Cabinet, no notice was taken of it and the interest in Chinese porcelain had completely declined.<sup>201</sup>

A few objects that were in the collection of Royer were not collected for decorative purposes. The objects bear the handwritten abbreviation of SA on the underside, meaning Son Altesse (His Highness). This abbreviation Royer has used in his notes to refer to Stadholder William V. It is possible that these objects once were in the collection of the Oranges and was auctioned in 1795 by the French after they invaded the Netherlands and bought by Royer.<sup>202</sup> This is interesting because these objects in Royer's collection were collected not for their Chinese origin, or for a decorative purpose, but primarily for their provenance, that they were in the collection of the Oranges and thus having an important connection to the history of the country. The porcelain objects were collected because they were important from a Dutch historical point of view.

Around the 1870's the appreciation for porcelain was completely the opposite to the second decade of the nineteenth century. When Chinese ceramics began to be collected seriously in the Netherlands from about 1870 onwards, it was possible to draw on a considerable supply consisting of the remainder of the millions of pieces imported in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.<sup>203</sup> The porcelain, slowly but steadily, also returned in the interiors of the Dutch renaissance style.<sup>204</sup>

That there was a large supply and demand is also concluded by the Leeuwarder collector Nanne Ottema (1874-1955), he observed that the demand was at such a height that many craftsmen made a career switch and became antique dealers.<sup>205</sup> His grandmother set the foundation of the collection around 1850. In the introduction to Ottema's publication on collecting porcelain from 1953 he mentioned that his grandmother's collection was a mid-nineteenth century collection just like any other and the porcelain was bought mostly at antique dealers in Leeuwarden. Next to Chinese tea and coffeesets, garnituresets, bowls/chargers and dishes for cabinets, Yongzheng period famille rose teapots and Yixing earthenware also European ware was present at that time. These objects were the usual suspects and very common objects that could be found in the collections of any aristocrat, burger, seamen, farmer, merchant and antique dealer in the second half of nineteenth-century Friesland.<sup>206</sup>

These porcelains were in first instance not collected for their Chinese origin, but as utensils, props and part of the decoration of the Dutch renaissance interiors. The renaissance interiors were derived from the historical Dutch interiors where Chinese porcelain was put on display. Thus, again the porcelain was collected – maybe not consciously – because the objects were part of the illustrious history, just like the SA marked objects in the collection of Royer.<sup>207</sup> The use of Chinese porcelain for decoration in the Dutch renaissance style can be seen clearly in the interiors of the house of the Bisdom van Vliet family in Haastrecht, the dining room of Theodorus Pieter Viruly (1822-1902) on the Rapenburg in Leiden and also in the study of Simon van Gijn (1864-1922) in Dordrecht.<sup>208</sup>

The collector J.G.A.N. de Vries (1853-1925) started collecting Chinese porcelain around the 1870's. In his publication of 1923, he remarked that in the 70's the collecting of porcelain in the Netherlands was still pioneering work; in contrast to other countries there were no books on the subject of Chinese porcelain in the context of the Netherlands.<sup>209</sup> In England and France nineteenth century publications on Chinese porcelain did exist, and Chinese porcelain did not fall from grace in that same century.<sup>210</sup> The collection of de Vries, bequeathed to the Rijksmuseum in 1925, was gathered systematically, there were no duplicate objects, and this is an obvious difference and break from the porcelain present in the above-mentioned collections that were focused on objects with a national history and/or popular for complete interior decorations.<sup>211</sup>

Between the beginning of the nineteenth century until the Dutch renaissance style of the 1870's many different styles were in fashion, applied and combined in the interior but also in a single object, as have been already seen in the works of the silversmiths in the previous chapter. The historicism and the upcoming of the Neogothic and Eclecticism of the 1830's and 40's, the rococo and the Louis XIV to XVI styles of the 50's and 60's were all an international phenomenon.<sup>212</sup>

At the same time these styles were not Dutch, and many Dutch citizens were concerned of the lack of a national style, since the Netherlands was at that time still a young nation and needed to create its own position between the bigger European nations by creating a national identity. The Dutch presentation at the World Exhibition of 1851 was seen as a failure and an example of the debate around the Dutch national identity.<sup>213</sup>

This national identity was also a subject in an article on porcelain by Mars in De Navorscher. He stumbles on the lack of a Dutch publication on Chinese porcelain and does not want to study Chinese porcelain from a French perspective, referring to the in 1856 published Histoire de la Fabrication de la Porcelaine Chinoise by Stanislas Julien. Because Chinese porcelain was a Dutch matter and part of the Dutch history, saying: "It (the publication) must shine a new light on the importance of porcelain as an article of trade with Japan and China, but most importantly it must relate to the way of life and progressive wealth of our ancestors".<sup>214</sup>

In an article by J.R. de Kruijff from 1880 he positively states that the main reason for the existing of the modern (gilded copper) mounts on porcelain was that these mounts were a protest against the idea that only foreign countries were able to produce applied arts in a new, "good" and exciting way. This statement was only possible because Chinese - and Japanese - porcelain was put in the perspective of the Dutch overseas expansion in the seventeenth- and eighteenth century and thus were a part of the Dutch history.<sup>215</sup>

Eventually, this historicism from a Dutch perspective combined with the desire of a Dutch style let to the Dutch to become proud of their illustrious history. In all the arts, from fine arts to the applied arts and architecture, the romantic reference to the glorious history of the country is made and seen.<sup>216</sup> The memory of the once glorious homeland stimulated the Dutch in the 19th century to rediscover the outdated and unfashionable porcelain, and thus also the phenomenon of mounting Chinese porcelain with Dutch silver.

To conclude, Chinese porcelain was mounted for the same reasons in the nineteenth century compared to the earlier mounting of porcelain in Europe. In the sixteenth and seventeenth century, mounts were applied to embellish but also transform the foreign porcelain into a shape that was understood, to emphasize its preciousness and enhance its appearance and rareness. Next to these causes, the mounts in the nineteenth century were also applied for repairs, to substitute for missing parts, to become a commemorative gift or to change/improve the function. That mainly Kangxi ware was mounted had to do with what kind of porcelain was supplied and demanded in the following periods. The porcelain objects from the Kangxi-period were mostly self-contained objects. The porcelain produced following the Kangxi-period were made on order and consisted of sets for use or decoration. Monochrome and polychrome decorated porcelain was mounted with (French) gilded bronze. Kangxi wares tend to be decorated in Blue-and-white, which was preferably combined with silver. How Chinese porcelain became relevant again in the first half of the eighteenth century had to do with the rise of the Dutch identity. The Dutch became inspired by and proud of their illustrious history, and Chinese porcelain was seen as part of their national history.

This, possibly, led to the revival of the phenomenon of mounting Chinese porcelain with Dutch silver in the nineteenth century.

Conclusion

For this thesis 160 objects of Chinese porcelain with Dutch silver mounts from the nineteenth century have been researched. Of these objects 54 are in a private collection in The Hague, the other 106 are in the collections of fourteen Dutch Museums. With a total of 37, the Groningermuseum has the biggest museum collection of objects that has been included for this research.

The pinnacle of mounting porcelain would have been around the middle of the eighteenth century as is seen from the dated silver mounts on the objects in both collections and exactly in 1851 as is concluded from the archive of As. Bonebakker and the work delivered by the silversmith Jacob Helweg.

The biggest part of the porcelain objects that are mounted were produced during the reign of the Kangxi emperor. This had to do with the objects that were supplied; mostly self-contained Blue-and-white decorated objects - for example a bowl, cup, dish, jar, jug or kettle. The porcelain after the Kangxi period was ordered after European taste, in polychrome decorations, and consisted of utilizable sets/services or for decoration.

There are multiple reasons for porcelain to be mounted. The mounts were for the larger part not applied, in contrast to what was expected, to repair damages of the porcelain, instead the silver substituted for missing parts (lids). Also, mounting of the porcelain could change the original function of the object, from a dish into a serving tray and a barrel into a cigar vase. Next to the obvious functional changes, the modest rims on the lids of kettles and tea-caddies, and the spouts mounted on jugs and teapots made the object function better than their original form.

Objects were also mounted for a completely different reason. Mounts were applied to commemorate special moments, for the occasion of a wedding anniversary or as a prize. These objects could have been made on order - the Backer bowls from the Amsterdam Museum and the two objects with commemorate medallions in the collection of the Groningermuseum - but were also bought from stock as is the case at the punchbowl from the Rijksmuseum. For this the porcelain would have been supplied by the orderer or have been purchased by the silversmith from (art) dealers.

In the nineteenth century the style of the silver mounts by the silversmiths tends to mirror the general fashion of combining different neo-styles as is seen in the works made by Schmidt. Some of the silversmiths, like Arnoldi & Wielick and Jacob Helweg, were famous for their mounts and distinguished themselves by specialising in the field of mounted objects. Their qualities were known by the clients, and they would specially place orders at the jewellers for these silversmiths.

Chinese porcelain was again fashionable from the first half of the eighteenth century. This coincided with the rise of the Dutch identity and the pride they had for their illustrious history. The porcelain that arrived in the Netherlands during the sixteenth and seventeenth century was seen as part of their national history.

So, what were the instigations for the revival of mounting Chinese porcelain with Dutch silver in the Netherlands in the nineteenth century? This thesis has attempted to show that with the combination of factors mentioned above that only the Netherlands in the nineteenth century had the perfect ground and circumstances for the revival of the practice of mounting Chinese porcelain with silver mounts.

It was Titus M. Eliëns who introduced me to Dutch silver mounted Chinese porcelain, without him opening my eyes and pointing me in this direction, this MA thesis would not have existed. For this I am most grateful.

I would like to thank my dearest colleague and mentor Suzanne Lambooy, who took a leap of faith in 2016 when hiring me as the collection assistant for the Applied Arts department at the Kunstmuseum in The Hague and inspired me to enroll into the Arts & Culture studies at Leiden University.

My gratitude goes to the following Dutch museums and colleagues there, for making the depot accessible and a visit possible and providing me of images and information. For this I extend my thanks to: Carola Steenbergen of the Drents Museum, Assen, Eveline Holsappel of the Fries Museum, Leeuwarden, Marieke van Loenhout of the Groninger Museum, Groningen, Hillebert Siemensma of the Jan Menze van Diepen stichting, Slochteren, Rik van Wegen of Kasteel-Museum Sypestyen, Loosdrecht, Eline van den Berg of the Keramiekmuseum Princessehof, Leeuwarden, Joanna Minderop and Sjoerd Popkema of Museum Arnhem, Arnhem, Alexandra van Dongen of Museum Boijmans van Beuningen, Rotterdam, Marco Bakker and Elien Voerman of Museum Paulina Bisdom van Vliet, Haastrecht, Suzanne Klüver, Mark Boers and Ron Stokhof of Museum Prinsenhof Delft, Delft, Jan van Campen and Dirk Jan Biemond of the Rijksmuseum Amsterdam, Amsterdam and Karina Leijnse of the Zeeuws Museum in Middelburg.

Last but not least, my gratitude goes to the collectors of the Private Collection in The Hague, who preferred to stay anonymous, for their warm welcome at their home during my research.

interview with the Private Collectors

This interview was taken on the 3rd of April 2021 with the private collector in the Hague in Mandarin and translated by the author.

-What is your earliest memory of art, and what led you to start collecting it?

"The love for Chinese art had always been in our family. We both grew up surrounded by art. Art at home of course has a different way of interaction. We appreciate it by using it; sat on Huanghuali chairs around a Huanghuali table and ate from porcelain. We watched our fathers practice their calligraphy."

"After we arrived in the Netherlands in the early 1980's, we started collecting ourselves. It was such a surprise that there were so many objects of Chinese art available in the Netherlands. We never could have thought that in a small country on the other side of the world Chinese art would be presented this largely on the market on a day like Queen's Day. We were homesick of course and found in the items a connection to our family, our friends and our home."

-What kind of art do you collect?

"In short, we collect everything that has a connection with China. Our collection consists of Chinese art made during the Ming- and Qing-dynasties, and ranges from paintings, furniture and ceramics to jade, ivory carvings and bronze statues."

-What is the main motivation behind your collecting?

"In the beginning we just bought everything we saw, there was no plan. Nowadays we collect for the future. We want to collect an overview of Chinese art that is available in the Netherlands but also unique and in a way even questionable pieces, for example ivory and rhinoceros' carvings, and objects that have a story to tell about the shared history between China and the Netherlands. We take great joy from lending our objects to museums for exhibitions. Hopefully, someday, we can open our own museum to share the stories between China and the Netherlands."

-How has your taste changed since you started collecting art?

"Our taste has of course changed! We bought everything that we thought was Chinese in the beginning, even buying some Delftware and Japanese porcelain! We also had a Chinese taste, focusing on the Chinese story or what was appreciated/found good from a Chinese point of view, for example Imperial porcelain and not export ware. Luckily time and our personal experience eventually taught us. We now ask ourselves what the connection is of the potential new acquisitions with Chinese and Dutch history. What is the story they tell?"

-What is still missing in your art collection?

"We will never be finished with collecting art. You never know what crosses your path, it all lays in the hand of destiny."

-Why did you start collecting mounted porcelain?

"It is interesting to see that the porcelain evolves into something new. This is an object category that we did not know existed and never had seen in China. We joke about it and say normal porcelain is nude and these objects are dressed. The objects are a fusion between east and west. We do not see it as a simple addition but as a cultural enrichment. The technique is also exceptional and shows this in a practical way. Spouts without silver always leak for example, but with a silver spout this problem is solved. Also, porcelain lids never close tightly, but the addition of the silver rims make it close tightly!"
